

Primary Care Networks

Background
The Ministry of Health is committed to providing a high-quality, accessible, and sustainable health care system for all British Columbians. Primary Care Networks (PCNs) are a key component of this system, providing a coordinated and integrated approach to primary care services. The Ministry is committed to supporting PCNs in their efforts to improve the health and well-being of the people of British Columbia.

Policy Objectives

The Ministry's policy objectives for PCNs are to: provide a coordinated and integrated approach to primary care services; improve the health and well-being of the people of British Columbia; and ensure that PCNs are sustainable and financially viable.
